True luxury is about comfort and making people feel at home.

Making your home a place of beauty and function is one of the most gracious ways to express yourself, says Diane Snyder, ASID, Allied member, of Innsbrook Interiors.

With 25 years heading her own design firm, Diane has demonstrated a unique ability to combine style, luxury and simplicity for comfortable, informal living, earning her high regard among clients and professionals alike.

“Increasingly, people want their homes to reflect their individuality,” she says. “Today, luxury is about comfort and making people feel at home. It means something different for every person. Some want a retreat, where color and informal furnishings are conducive to instant relaxation. Others want a more elegantly transitional interior where the focus is less on color and more on carefully chosen works of art.”

“Our home allows us the unique freedom to surround ourselves with our favorite colors, textures and objects,” she continues. “Ultimately, it’s the one place where we can provide for all the aspects of our personality – the sophisticated side and the simple side, the warm and the cool, the bold and the introspective.

“Whether building a new home or freshening up a single room, the end result should be a home that welcomes family and friends, one that enhances your quality of life and exceeds your expectations.”

That varies with each project, Diane says. “A good designer encourages this.”

“I approach each project as a blank page,” she explains. “When each project begins, the focus is on the client’s input. I also look for what’s unique about the space. It could be the architecture or the view, or perhaps a favorite work of art that sets us on a certain course.”

Her clientele includes many successful business owners and entrepreneurs, as well as multiple CEOs of Fortune 500 companies. She credits her success to her attention to detail, sense of humor and resourcefulness, supported by her insistence on employing only the most accomplished craftsmen and artisans.

In the end, she says, a designer is only as good as her resources. A regular traveler to major design markets, Diane constantly seeks opportunities to learn, to explore and absorb the new, to stay fresh, and to bring the best to each client.
